

Artist Jodie Atherton with her snow.

I painted snow. Snow that I ski on, soak in, raft on and ultimately use as drinking water and to grow my veggies.

Snow that I dream about in the summer when Laramie gets hot.

Fresh snow that was glittering on the mountain tops the day I added to the mural.

I am a 3D artist who specializes in ceramics alongside old, discarded materials.

I describe and create a moment in time, drawing attention to causes by bringing forth new life to old objects.

Painting murals pushes my artistic comfort zone. I strive to create this push/pull emotion in my sculptures.

And, I like seeing public art push a few boundaries too. Something to make the viewer think outside the box, to view and engage with the world through different lenses.

I was born and raised in Laramie, went to UW and chose to stay and spread my wings locally. I am very rooted in our community.

Growing up, I was surrounded by western art at home and in galleries.

I choose to put a contemporary spin into all that I make, spreading creativity through the love and kindness that was shown to me by my parents.
